Brand New Book. Excerpt from Coinage of Silver Dollars: Speech of Hon. Timothy O. Howe, of Wisconsin, in the Senate of the United States, February 5, 1878 Mr. President: Only, that courage which is born of conviction would induce me to present my own views immediately succeeding the very able and the very eloquent speech to which the Senate has just listened. Sir, it is not my purpose to-night to attempt to persuade any one else how to vote. My object is as briefly as possible to explain my own vote. I do that in the presence of the Senate because your rules require it to be done here; but my object, I confess in the outset, is to make myself intelligible if I can, rather to a few constituents of my own for whose judgment I have great respect but whose views on the question now before the Senate do not correspond with my own. From some of those constituents I have heard within a few days. Mr. President, if the millions comprising the people of the United States had just been scattered over the country, if we had no coinage, no currency, no organized industry, no commerce; and if we had contracted no debts, public or private, then we should be quite at liberty to adopt such system of finance, such system of currency, to adopt such medium of exchange, to accept such standard of value, whether single or double or quadruple, as we might think best calculated to open up the future before us. That is not our condition....
