Excerpt from An Article on the Debts of the States: From the Democratic Review, for January 1844 For it is not true, as has been at times asserted or insinuated, that there has been in any part of these transactions any deliberate fraud, or intention to deceive, on the part of any of the State Governments. The debts have been all contracted in good faith, under circumstances which authorized a reasonable expectation of being able to provide for them, principal and interest; and for the most part, for purposes not only right and proper, but highly honorable to the contracting parties. The origin of these debts contrasts, in fact, most favorably with that of the immense masses of public debt now existing in Europe. These have generally had their source in the reckless ambition or wasteful prodigality of the rulers of nations. The financial embarrassments that were the immediate cause of the French Revolution, grew out of the boundless expense of the wars of Louis the incalculable amount which he lavished upon court favorites and festivals. The beginning of the present Spanish debt was a loan of forty millions of hard money, equal to at least a hundred and twenty at the present day, contracted by Philip V. For the purpose of laying out a garden with fountains, in imitation of the splendid bauble of Versailles. The present debts of Great Britain, France, and the other principal nations, are, for the most part, the results of the wars of the French Revolution and although a just and necessary war carried on for the defence of a country, is the highest and noblest object to which the public funds can be devoted, and...
