THE SEVEN WIVES OF HARALD FAIRHAIR King Gudrod was called the Hunter and he lived up to his name. Not only did he need to prove his power by hunting down animals, but he took the same actions when dealing with people. Gudrod was accustomed to getting his own way and he did what he needed to make that happen. When his first wife died, he decided he would have Aasa from the neighboring kingdom of Agder for his next wife. Aasa was a young woman of exceeding great beauty. She was tall of stature with long, flaming red hair and piercing green eyes. Her beauty was only exceeded by her strong will and sharp intellect. and Gudrod had desired her for a long while. He sent his men west to Agder to ask Aasa s father, King Harald Redbeard, to give his daughter to him. There will be no match between Gudrod the Hunter and my daughter, exclaimed Harald Redbeard, Take your request and go elsewhere! Aasa would never consider a man like Gudrod to wed! The ambassadors returned and told the result of their errand. Harald Redbeard refused my offer? shouted Gudrod. We shall see how he likes my next offer! Gather the men and ready the ships. We sail for Agder tonight! A great force of ships and men landed before dawn near the estate of King Harald and crept, with stealth, up the hill to the longhouse. After the building was completely surrounded, King Gudrod shouted at the door, Harald Redbeard, you shall pay dearly for refusing to give your daughter Aasa to me. Tonight, she shall be in my bed and you shall be dead!...
