Fanselow suggested that one way of developing is to break our own rules and see what happens. If we normally teach one way, in other words, we should try teaching in the opposite way and see what effect it has. If we normally move around the class all the time, perhaps we should see what happens if we spend the whole lesson sitting in the same place. The results may be surprising but will never be less than interesting. . . . We need to have confidence and enthusiasm for investigation and discovery. (Jeremy Harmer, The Practice of English Language Teaching, 4th Edition, 2007, Longman) As John Fanselow observes in his undeservedly little-known book, Breaking Rules, we tend to operate within a rather narrow range most of the time. For teachers, diversity has the potential to . . . enable them to discover things about themselves, their students and the process, which would otherwise remain unnoticed. . . . each rule we break provides us with another alternative rule that is self-generated and tests the validity of our preconceived notions. (Fanselow, 6) If we never try anything different, however small, we never find out how...
