Random House USA Inc, India, 1998. Paperback. Condition: New. Updated ed.. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .As the countdown to the 1996 presidential election gets under way, the position of the Republican Party seems stronger than ever. It controls both the House and the Senate. It responded to the nation's call for change in 1994 and has a highly visible spokesman for that change in the Speaker of the House. But in 1996 should it have your vote? That is the question that Republican insider Tanya Melich poses as she unmaskes the national GOP's twenty-year history of hypocrisy toward women; as she challenges its deliberately orchestrated slide away from centrist policies; and as she reveals how the party's national leadership, pressed by the religious right, has adopted a divisive strategy that intentionally exploits antifeminist fears to garner votes. An impassioned call to arms to Republicans and to all Americans to reject the extremist social agenda that dominates the party, this is a book sure to set off a firestorm of debate across the land. A lifelong Republican, for over a quarter century Tanya Melich has been an active and loyal player in her party's politics. But as a delegate to the 1992 presidential convention, Melich found herself angered and disillusioned by the direction her party had taken. Suddenly it was apparent that the Grand Old Party had ceded control to right-wing zealots whose purpose was to intensify hostility between the sexes and sow division among the American people. Now, in this authoritative, closely reasoned, and often shocking book, Melich cites chapter, verse, and the actions of participants to document the ways in which the Reagan and Bush administrations moved to curtail abortion, family and child-care programs, and policies to help women gain equal opportunity; how they skewed the appointments of women in the administration and in party leadership; and how they appealed to sexist...
