

Blue Skies and Dark Nights

By Bill Randle

Independent Books, Keston, 2002. Hard Cover. Condition: New. Dust Jacket Condition: New. 1st Edition. Blue Skies and Dark Nights is the autobiography of Group Captain Bill Randle. From his initial flight training in the United States on the fledgling Arnold scheme, to the bombing of Germany, through a remarkable evasion and successful home run, to MI9 and the formation of post-war Escape and Evasion policy with the Americans, to learning to fly helicopters with the US Marines, then on to taking part in search and rescue missions in Korea; this is an honest and straightforward account of an unusual career in the RAF and beyond. Those with an interest in the RAF and world affairs will find Bill Randle's story fascinating as he describes what it was like to be at the center of many world events. It also clearly illustrates the frustrations implicit in a service life, as well as the great humor and tragedy which go with the acceptance of the responsibilities of rank. Blue Skies and Dark Nights is an important record of service in the RAF during World War II and in the Cold War period that followed, together with the great changes in Africa and the...
