Excerpt from Washington: An Address George Washington never was a prematurely developed prig. He was a healthy, wholesome, vigorous boy. Born like Lincoln in a log cabin, amidst humble backwoods surroundings, he was a genuine child of the soil, simple and without pretense or any trace of artificial self consciousness. His imperfect education was received, first from a Mr. Roddy, at what was then known as a fieldschool; then at the hands of a Mr. Williams who taught him the scant rudiments of reading, writing and arithmetic; afterwards he attended for a brief period an academy at old Fredericksburg presided over by a Mr. Marye, a French huguenot, or the son of a huguenot who had fled from France to escape the fierce persecutions heaped upon the protestants of that realm. The indomitable love of liberty, freedom of thought, and the right to worship God according to the dictates of one's conscience, so dear to these exiles, were no doubt impressed by this teacher upon the mind of his young pupil. It was he who gave...
