General Greene joined the army at the camp before Boston, immediately after the battle of Lexington, in 1775, and continued in active service, without a day s furlough, to the final disbandment, in 1783. From the spring of 1778 to the summer of 1780 he filled, in addition to his rank as Major-General, the office of Quartermaster-General, which he accepted at the urgent solicitation of Washington; which he found in a state of absolute disorganization; and which, under all the disadvantages of an exhausted country and depreciated currency, he administered with such promptitude and efficiency as to call forth from the Commander-in-Chief the assurance that no...
