After a time I found out who was the dealer. Who it was can best be set forth by a little story. There is a well-known, portly, handsome old gentleman who is well known in Chicago, and whose individuality will be sufficiently indicated by his popular title, which is Uncle David. He is, or was, very fond of a little draw, and at times would sit up as late as any of the boys, with stacks of chips and pieces of figured pasteboard. One night David found himself the possessor of a hand containing four kings. He sailed in, raised everybody, got raised in turn, to his great delight, went back, and so on see-sawing till he and another man--the only other man in--had all the money up which they had and could beg or borrow. Uncle David laid down his four kings, sorry only that the other fellow hadn't more money. He laid down his four kings, and reached for the money, whereupon the other party showed four aces and raked in the stakes. Uncle David is slightly profane at times. He rose to his feet, his brow clothed in thunder, and the air blue with curses. I'll be totally d--d if I'll stand any of that! I just want to know who dealt them cards, Why, Uncle David, said the party unanimously, You dealt the cards yourself! Probably I know now who dealt them cards in the...
