Excerpt: .her hands, and laughed at her own thoughts, she shook her ambrosial curls in a way which made George Harroway think her a perfect Hebe. The hours sped quickly while Harroway and Mrs. Rosny discoursed, with impressiveness, on an infinity of subjects. It was tiffin time. George was invited to remain, and did so; and it was past four o'clock before he got home, where he found Sam Freeport superintending the putting up of a piano, which he said he had bought at a sale--just for luck. CHAPTER XXII. Harrow Ay suggested to his wife the propriety of fitting up their quarters in something like style, and proposed attending an auction for the purpose of making purchases. She gave several reasons why they should do nothing of the kind: --1st. She heard the Colonel say they were likely to move up the country earlier than was expected; 2nd, they had already sufficient for their wants and position; and, 3rd, they had no money, and could only make an outlay by running into debt. All these reasons were overruled, as absurd, childish, and ridiculous. As for debt, her husband observed, I am told it is the custom of the country. Anne had heard her husband often boast that he never owed a shilling in his life for more than a few days together, and this change of sentiment she regarded as a bad omen. She argued the point strenuously; but she might have spared herself...
