This book forms one of the Library of Historic Theology edited by Rev. Wm. C. Piercy, M. A. The object of the series is to focus the results of specialized research in their bearing on the Faith. The present volume deals with Christian Apologetic, and carries out strenuously the ideal of the series with respect to that subject. In the preface the author guards himself against a possible criticism which might suggest the futility of attempting to deal with far-reaching subjects such as Evangelicalism or the Trinity in single short chapters. But such criticism would fail of its mark, because the author quite adequately deals with the aspects of these topics which are relative to his purpose. Perhaps the last two chapters, entitled The Task of the Future and The Parting of the Ways, might be considered more vulnerable. Mr. Shebbeares starting point lies in that sense of Duty and of Guilt to be found even in an Age of Doubt; and that gives the keynote of his purpose throughout. Founding on Kantian ethical doctrine he exhibits the ideas of guilt and duty in common consciousness, and then proceeds to give a short summary of the methods of deliverance from guilt in Buddhism and Judaism, and of the moral aspects of the Pauline doctrine of justification by faith. Two chapters on Christ and the Historical Jesus following a similar non-doctrinal method, emphasize the power of Christianity to deliver from the sense of guilt, provided that the purely ethical attitude has passed into the religious. When the author turns to the schools of personal piety to find how this transition is described as being in practice attained, he argues that analysis...
