Excerpt from Yorkshire, Past and Present, Vol. 1: A History and a Description of the Three Ridings of the Great County of York, From the Earliest Ages to the Year 1870; With an Account of Its Manufactures, Commerce, and Civil and Mechanical Engineering The incursions of the Saxons and the Angles into the British Islands differed greatly, as relates to the rapidity of the conquest and settlement of the country, from the irruptions of the other Germanic tribes into Gaul, Italy, and Spain, though the most important of them took place in the same age, and were accelerated, if not produced, by the same cause; namely, the irruption of immense tribes of Huns into Germany, and as far westward as the river Marne - between the years 440 and 452 - under the command of the terrible Attila, noted even among barbarian conquerors as the Scourge of God. On the Continent the incursions of the Germanic tribes were made by land, and were effected by vast armies of fighting men, accompanied by their wives and children. These hordes, after a few victorious battles, either extirpated or reduced to subjection the original inhabitants, and in a few years took possession of, settled in, and peopled the conquered countries. This was the case with the Franks in Gaul, the Goths in Spain, the Lombards in Italy, and even the Vandals in North Africa. In those countries the invading armies, amounting in some cases to many hundred thousands of fighting men, with their wives and children, in a few years established the dominion of the new and victorious races over whole nations and vast ranges of country: About the Publisher Forgotten Books...
