Excerpt: .may be easily remembered by connecting them with the most peculiar or extraordinary plant which they contain; and the properties of the genera compiling them may likewise be impressed upon the mind in a similar manner, by associating them with the species in which they are most perceptible. Considering the universal, nay instinctive, love of natural order which exists among mankind, it is really astonishing that any attempts should be made to check the progress of a botanical system, of which that is the most remarkable recommendation. What would be thought of a valuable narrative, the events of which were connected only by the similarity of one or two of their features, without any regard to the period of their occurrence, or their relative position towards each other? We may reasonably infer that every person of sense would discard and condemn it; while the individual who undertook and accomplished its proper arrangement, would be regarded with respect and honour. Analogous to this, was the classification of Linnams. The greater part of the plants composing his) Orders have no real relation to each other, while the Classes are of course still more heterogeneous. How, therefore, the obloquy that has been heaped on those who have defended, elucidated, and improved the system of Jussieu, can be reconciled with the rational feelings of mankind generally, we are at a loss to divine. It is certain that future ages, at least, will appreciate their labours, and we cannot but...
