His Lordship said, The law respecting Catholics was different in England and Ireland. Fourteen years ago, the Parliament of Ireland, reasonably agreed to open the Army, and, as far as in them lay, the Navy, to the Catholics - The offices of Commander in Chief, Master-General of the Ordnance, and General on the Staff were alone excepted - to all other military employments they were eligible. I also refer you to the speech of Lord Hardwicke, (formerly Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, ) delivered in the House of Lords, April 13th, and published in the Glasgow Courier of April 18th, in which his Lordship said, He could not see what rational objection could be entertained against giving his Majesty that power in one part of the empire, which he possessed in another. - By the Act of 1793, his Majesty might appoint Catholics to Naval commands in Ireland; - nay, he might appoint a Catholic Admiral to command on the Irish station. - In the Army, Catholics might become Generals, but not Generals on the Staff in that country.
