Or Tycho Brache the moon surveying round, Quite puzzled at her crust and igneous hills, And wondering if mankind should there be found Living without the use of Beecham s Pills? Come, mummy, speak thou hast a little tongue Which could discourse on things both grave and gay. Speak! But no you won t, then I ll be gone, I ll come and make you speak some other day., . . In The Botanic Qarden5, GLASGOW. Thanks, Dr. Grant, the forenoon s toil is over, Till six o clock we ll rest on beds of clover, Packed all inside with fair Loch Fyne s sardines, We ll gladly pack up outside for the gardens. There free from care the world and all its groans, On greensward slopes shall rest our lazy bones; The birds our minstrels, butterflies our cronies, We ll lie like logs, or sport like Shetland ponies; A hundred sweet perfumes the breeze shall wing us, A thousand waving shrubs their odors bring us; Unnumbered flowers of every shade and hue, Display their charms inviting to our view; Nor to these prized delights alone confined, More we would wish, and more we re sure to find; See yon fair damsels gaily promenade, In lively hues of silk and rich brocade; To watch each sparkling...
