Brand New Book. Excerpt from The Friend of Progress Monthly, Vol. 1: February, 1865 This narrative was composed primarily to fill up the interval of time between the death and resurrection of the Christ, and to account for his presence and work. But it does more than this: it expresses the old belief in the unlimited extent of the Redeemer s mission, as comprehending all souls - the darkened, the diseased, the wicked: it speaks, too, of the infinite tenderness of that mission: it hints at the indefinite and limitless power of Truth: and it suggests the idea that the work of the Redeemer was, after all, simply the release of souls from bondage. The old myth touches the very heart of one of our most noble and beautiful ideas: this, namely, that the souls of wicked men are simply souls in bondage, and that the redeemer from bondage is Light. All preaching is, therefore, to Spirits in Prison; that is, to spirits bound, limited, shut up in narrow confines, inclosed within mils, held in hard duress by some Prince of Darkness. Spirits - there would be no use in preaching to them at all, if they were not. It would be merest absurdity to preach to pieces of machinery, or masses of organization, or the most exquisite arrange ments of nerve and tissue. Spirits - rational beings, with will, affections, intelligence, faculties through which ideas and in?uences can get into them; with capacity for develop ment and growth; with an individuality of their own, which defines them against every other individuality, and a personality which enables them to share...
