Excerpt: .A third tributary of the Khabour, the ancient Mygdonius, now the river of Nisibin, flows more to the east, passing that celebrated spot. Nisibis, as the name is written on medals that;ire preserved of it, and by ancient authors, dates from a remote antiquity. It is supposed to have been first taken by the Romans under Lucullus; and about two centuries afterwards it surrendered to the arms of Trajan. It was long deemed the bulwark of the east, and as the residence of emperors, nobles, and generals, was decorated with columned edifices in the architecture of the time. It was defended by a deep ditch, and a triple inclosure of brick walls. The three sieges by Sapor, in the former part of the fourth century, and his unavailing efforts to capture the city, are memorable in history. The story of the last siege, during which the river...
