Dimensions: 9.7in. x 7.4in. x 0.1in.Pursuant to a congressional request, GAO reviewed the Armys fiscal year (FY) 1990: (1) 144-million automatic data processing (ADP) budget request for the Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) and Forces Command (FORSCOM); (2) 53-million request to modernize and redesign six standard Army software systems and the potential impact on the planned replacement of the 1-billion Army Standard Information Management System (ASIMS); and (3) 107-million request to purchase microcomputers from indefinite-delivery and indefinite-quantity contracts. GAO found that the: (1) validity of the requirements for the 1. 4 billion in information system initiatives identified in TRADOC and FORSCOM plans was questionable because TRADOC and FORSCOM had not fully complied with the Armys Information Resources Management (IRM) Program; (2) Army may limit its options for replacing ASIMS, because it has not completed a strategy for the future ADP hardware environment, but has begun modernizing six standard software systems to run on the present hardware system; and (3) Armys request for microcomputer purchases from indefinite-delivery and indefinite-quantity contracts may not be fully supported by valid requirements because major commands that can order microcomputers from the...
