Who did the enchanted key belong to, and what secret does it hold? In this new adventure with Peter Vole and Samson Mouse, we cannot resist following them to a mysterious land, where we learn how useful pollen is and what sorts of extraordinary things can happen when children can't fall asleep at night. Peter slept the sleep of the just. While he was doing so, his tiny nightcap slipped off of his head; and while he snored, his whiskers vibrated in synchrony with every breath. His dotted blanket nearly slipped off from the bed - an incident to which the little vole reacted by snoring even louder. What a cold night, thought Peter while shivering. He pulled his teeny eiderdown onto himself in such a way that left his tiny nose almost entirely out of sight. Suddenly he heard some noise. This noise, which sounded like that of someone rummaging, could be heard from the living room. Outside, the branches were wearily swinging in the wind, sometimes knocking against the large living room window. The moon illuminated the place enigmatically, casting a shadow of the branches swinging in the wind. It seemed as though someone must have been outside! It can't be Mr Watson. he must already be sleeping by now concluded the little vole.
