Forgotten Books, 2018. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Church s Painting: The Heart of the Andes The origin of the broken surface of the earth, we learn, is the subterranean power of upheaval. In obedience to that power, inconceivable to the human mind, the outer crust of the globe is lifted into the irregularities which we see. Around and upon these are the work and play and battles of the elements. The surf beats at the base, and the storm at the summit of the mountain; along its sides sweep the wind and rain; heat and frost dissolve, explode, and crumble; torrents scour the chasms; rivers wind through the valleys, bearing forward fragments of their own banks and channels; the earthquake detaches; through the omnipresence of gravitation, the abyss receives alike the sifted sand and pebbles, and the avalanche. Thus the elements and forces of the earth are forever busy in the apparently infinite task of reducing to a level the primeval erections of violence. But how are these opening remarks pertinent to landscape-painting, or to its criticism? Evidently, some apprehension of the process of landscape-making by the instrumentalities of the Creator, is necessary in order successfully to conduct the process of landscape painting by the feeble instrumentalities of man. And what is necessary to the painter, is in some degree to the critic, whose proper task is to reproduce and explain, in so far as he is able, the work of the artist, and compare it with the living landscape. A knowledge of the roughening and the smoothing of the earth, by the powers which haunt its sunless caverns, and toil and contend upon its face, is evidently essential in order to an intelligent..
