Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.In Code Name Casselberry we deal with the evacuation of trapped citizens from hostile countries by unconventional means. In Africa, things are different than in the rest of the world and often more confused. A nation that seems peaceful and is peaceful for years may explode overnight into violence. It is hard to predict such events because the signs of unrest are always there, part of life almost. You must act very quickly then which is why the usual Western way of evacuation is to secure an airport or airfield. Once that happens, the trapped citizens are evacuated by cargo plane or other aircraft, but the airport is always protected by conventional forces (Marines, Paratroopers, led by Special Forces). The problem with this is that the technique is known. You may very well walk into an ambush when you do so. I also know that every single US Embassy in sub-Saharan Africa was studied to be attacked as well as all the evacuation routes. I did the one in Abuja, Nigeria, and all will be destroyed if needs be. Civilian unrest may well become a civil war sooner than later. If the Marines are not available, or a friendly warship is not close to launch its helicopters or the trapped ones far away from the coast, Africa tends to be far away from most places, depending, and the US Africa Command a sick joke, what do you do? Other plans are then made in a great hurry. Spies are often used to do what they can during such eventualities. First to meet the incoming forces, or secondly to smuggle the people out themselves or lastly, to keep them safe until the conventional...
