A powerful letter from a mother to her daughter is offering a message that can inspire anyone. - The Huffington Post This should be required reading for all mamas and their daughters. - Parents Magazine Hammer has done a wonderful job putting into words the different ways we want our children to love and respect themselves. - Scary Mommy What began as a simple 222-word letter to her daughter became an empowering message that spread around the world. When her five-year-old daughter started kindergarten, Toni Hammer decided to write down some advice to help her daughter grow into a strong, independent, confident woman who knew how to be unapologetically who she was. Things like, Don t wear a dress if you don t want to, and If you re hungry, eat, and eat what you want. The words resonated so strongly with her readers that Toni has chosen to turn into a book. A portion of all sales will be donated to organizations whose missions are to empower and encourage young women everywhere to be who they are and do what they want to do.
