D: As Preacher to the University, and Plummer Professor of Christian Morals in Harvard College, on Tuesday, September 4, 1855 Thus we are told that a man is quick or slow, cheerful or melancholy, believing or distrustful, social and affectionate or reserved and cold, according to his temperament; and his temperament itself cannot be changed. Perhaps, at least in ordinary cases, a mans temperament cannot be changed, in the sense of substituting one temperament for another; but certainly it can be subdued; it can be mellowed; it can be touched with a better spirit, and to finer and higher issues. A coarse cheerful man may become a refined cheerful man; and this is certainly to change the character of his cheerfulness. So likewise the constitutional coldness and reserve of a selfish and worldly man is a very different thing from the constitutional coldness and reserve of a sincere Christian. I agree entirely with the English bishop who said that temper is nine tenths...
