FAST (PAPERBACK)

Stephen Cea, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . FAST is a modern interpretation of Faust, except that instead of the hoofed personification of evil, it is modern society itself that beguiles the protagonist. Not only is the title an allusion to Faust, but it also refers to the speed of horses which is a major aspect of the novel, and is a metaphor for the speed at which the modern world moves. It is this speed that often makes it difficult for a person to make proper cogent decisions. People react to their particular realities in a manner characterized by Sartre as Being-in-Itself because they don t have time to reflect on their decisions, instead of by Being-for-Itself which requires a conscious evaluation before making those determinations. FAST is narrated in the first person. It has to be in order to attain the level of introspection the author wanted to express to the reader. The prologue is an exposition on how the narrator views the modern world. While sitting in his prison cell contemplating life, he tells the reader that he is about to detail those prior events that led him astray for the purpose of teaching a life lesson. Those events span a forty year period starting with the narrator s early childhood, and it becomes evident that the novel is a coming of age piece in the German Bildungsroman tradition. The early chapters of the novel introduce and develop strong familial characters and relationships. The narrator s mother is an intelligent, strong-willed woman whose fortitude keeps the family a cohesive unit. The narrator s father is a physically powerful and violent ex-convict, yet his love for his family is so self-evident that the reader cannot help but like him....
