Proceedings of State Agricultural Society, held at Alexandria, La. , January, 1891. The Ramie Plant, by W. H. Murray, Supt. of Ramie Culture in California. : o: WITH OUR HEADERS. A correspondent, on page 297, gives some valuable points in regard to the proper setting of steam boilers, which could only have been gained by long experience. His reference to the different results obtained from boilers in different localities, that were set in the same way as nearly as possible, may perhaps be explained by the different elevation of the two localities, or the fact that in one, owing to proximity of high land, the wind had a downward course instead of a rapid upward course, sufficient to make a perceptible difference between...
