Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Address Delivered Before the Montgomery County Agricultural Society Judge Peters unquestionably first called public attention to this substance in 1797, by a treatise, in which he refers to his experience of its use fifteen years before. It is enough to say, that its appropriation by both these agriculturists was nearly contemporaneous, and that a question of precedence can scarcely be made, where each acted independently of the other, and where the efforts of both were so eminently meritorious. The introduction of gypsum to the notice of our farmers, and its adoption by them as a means of fertilization, is a fact of no small consequence in the history of our domestic agriculture. I refer to it only in order to mark it as an era in our rural annals. But if his priority in the adoption of gypsum may be questioned, his claim to other improvements are incontestable. Such was the state of our domestic tillage eighty years ago, that the ploughs and harrows were unfit for their purpose. Those of his own invention were substituted by the...
