As he was promoted to Public School No. 64 from the school which he attended he was admitted to the class. E. R., like some of his friends, is a miniature fatalist. He told an interested visitor, who questioned him as to how he was admitted to-the class, that it was fate that he was chosen. The particular evening that he was discovered was a Sunday on which he was indifferent about attending the Children s Hour. He had decided to remain at home, but his older brother urged him to go, saying, You may have an interesting time. You never can tell what may happen. It may do you good. Well, said E. R., you see if I hadn t gone I may never have been chosen for this class. A bright aggressive looking boy entered the principal s office one afternoon,...
