Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Community Studies for Rural High Schools No course of instruction in the public schools is complete that does not give the learner a closer and more definite knowledge and understanding of his immediate environment. This is a truth that we have in the past largely overlooked in planning courses of study for our schools, particularly for our high schools. Languages and peoples that are dead and activities and institutions that are remote in time or distance are interesting and valuable and have a proper place in our high school programs; but their place should be a subordinate one. So strong, however, are the cords with which tradition has bound most of us that we have continued to act on the assumption that no education can be acceptable or in good repute that does not include a large share of these dead and remote things and that the study of the life that now is and the conditions and circumstances that immediately surround us cannot have a legitimate place in school instruction. The result of this...
