Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Loria, Vol. 16: Winter, 1940 Dusk and the glass of the train window magnified the man. He was a giant parody on the god, Jehovah: tufts of white hair protruding from beneath the soiled gray hat, bristling tufts of white from each huge ear. A beard, un combed, tobacco-stained as if the white had been accidently scorched by too hot an iron, hid the lower portion of his face. Flesh bulged red and hairy from his coat sleeves and in a limp roll over the tops of his unlaced shoes. There was a vast uncertainty about him, in his eyes with their watery vagueness, in his hands fat, stumpy and ineffectual. He watched out the window in a sort of dull comprehension. A nostalgic sadness touched him and faded into forgetfulness as he caught sight of his own reflection in the glass. Slowly, he raised one hand to his cheek and brushed the roughened skin furtively. With a guilty reflex he let the hand drop to his lap. The Thing was stirring again. With infinite slowness it was moving. About the...
