Senator C. There might be one difference. I have a AMPBELL hunch the banking system does a much better job in record keeping than the Federal Government. I guess thats one of my basic concerns. When we talk about historical accounting, that leads to the assumption that theres something to account or there are some documents out there or something. But with this huge number of totally missing, gaping holes in the ability to document, thats why I thought, well, somewhere along the line weve got to cut our losses and start cutting some checks to people that want to opt out. Because I dont think were ever going to be able to get a complete and full accounting when we hear stories like we did a couple of years ago of rat infested garbage bags full of partially eaten documents in warehouses in Albuquerque, things of that nature. Jim, did you want to comment ASON Mr. C. Yes; I just wanted to make a couple comments, Mr. Chairman, if I can. On the issue that you were just talking about, the historical ac-counting, clearly there are problems and obstacles and difficulties that well have at the Department of the Interior to do an historical accounting. There are missing documents. There are faults with computer systems. Weve had generations of people accounting for monies that were paid in and they had...
