Gregory/Ness. Paperback. Condition: New. Jennifer Givner (illustrator). 290 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.7in. As a scientist researches dark energy a past life in ancient Rome is revealed. Has he stumbled across something even bigger than he could ever imagine or merely crumbling under the pressure of the war on science? He initially dismisses his dreams as hallucinations, yet they keep coming back, each time more powerful than ever. Where do they lead? What is their purpose? In 2025 cyber mobs in the US are revolting against science and technology. Oligarchs have weaponized social media to slow the pace of innovation, including high profile attacks against scientists and technologists. Their global business empires, threatened by increasing rates of disruption, are on the brink of collapse. Growing income gaps between techies and the rest of the public have bolstered oligarch claims against science giving them a growing army of angry followers yearning for simpler, slower times. A controversial SRI lab in Silicon Valley is shut down under pressure by a large donor network funded by the oligarchs. The researchers, whose reputations have been marred by online attack campaigns, leave the US for Prague to start over with support from a local University interested in their work with graphene. The leader of the team soon discovers he is entangled with a young Roman engineer visiting ancient Alexandria with the Tenth Legion in 48BCE. His dreams become increasingly lucid and powerful over time, taking him through the Great Library of Alexandria and the streets of Antioch. As he works to reconcile his dreams and research, he wonders if he has stumbled upon something even more powerful than dark energy: the ability to gaze into the past in amazing detail and witness history in person. In his dreams Roy Swenson witnesses the birth of Western Civilization....
