Excerpt from A Case of Erythromelalgia, With Microscopical Examination of the Tissue From an Amputated Toe IT is known to neurologists that in 1872, and again later, one of the authors of this paper described cases of red neuralgia, and spoke of it as an unrecognized disease. Since then he has reported many cases. In this country the diagnosis has been disputed or the disease has been confused with Raynaud s malady. In the text-books it has frequently been hopelessly misunderstood. In France, however, a treatise (lan nois) was published upon it at an early date, and in England and, of late, in Germany it is fully accepted as a distinct malady by certain writers. It is now too well known to make a detailed description necessary. In its purity of type it must be seen in the younger adult. In older persons there are variations such as our present patient Offers. In young cases there may be no pain and no ?ush when the limb is in a horizontal position, but the arteries throb, the temperature rises, and the redness becomes intense when the foot is pendent. In Old cases and Older people the temperature obeys the normal law and falls when the foot is down, and the ?ush and pain are less surely absent from the elevated foot. The tenderness, also, in these aberrant types is not so very much increased by pendency as is the case when the disease is more recent. J. O., a merchant, married, aged sixty-one years, has had neither syphilis nor gonorrhoea. He is said to have had typhoid fever at the age of twenty, again in 1863, and once more in 1865. In June, 1863,...
