Bibliogov, United States, 2013. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 246 x 189 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .The commander of the 57th Field Artillery Brigade, Wisconsin National Guard, when he was given the opportunity to lead an embedded training team (ETT) to Afghanistan, Colonel Dominic Cariello arrived in theater in February 2006 and, during his 11-month deployment, commanded two regional corps advisory groups and served as the senior mentor to two Afghan generals, Major General Rahmatullah Raufi and Major General Abdul Khaliq, the commanders of the Afghan National Army's 205th and 203rd Corps respectively. In this interview, he begins by discussing the predeployment training he received at Camp Shelby and then moves into his 15-minute right-seat ride upon arriving in country, which led immediately into planning for Operation River Dance - the poppy eradication program conducted jointly with the ANA. Talking about the full range of his ETT experiences, Cariello approvingly quotes Major General Richard Durbin who once said, Where goeth the ANA, so goeth the ETT - and that's what we did Cariello said. If it wasn't immoral, illegal or stupid, we went. Where they went, we went - and we had to. We provided the close air support and the medical evacuation as well as our advising, mentoring, coaching and facilitating. We were also the advocates for the ANA. In addition, Cariello talks about working with coalition operational mentor and liaison teams. He also speaks at great length and in great depth about his often challenging but rewarding relationships with the two Afghan generals, explaining how very professional and tactfully he used forceful mentoring with each of them and how, on one occasion, he was temporarily shunned by General Raufi and reveals the measures he took to get back in...
