Condition: New. Publisher/Verlag: Éditions universitaires européennes | Images scanner et Méthode Marching Cubes | De nos jours les images en trois dimensions sont les plus utilisées dans le domaine médical. Elles permettent au radiologue la visualisation du corps humain, dans le but de diagnostiquer divers pathologies. Afin d'avoir des images 3D, plusieurs étapes sont nécessaires : segmentation, compréhension et décision. L'objectif de notre travail était la reconstruction 3D du crâne à partir des coupes 2D tomodensitométriques. Notre base de données contenait 266 projections. Nous avons débuté par segmenter les coupes 2D. Nous avons utilisé les méthodes de segmentation OTSU, Contours actifs et Croissance région. Nous avons comparé ces méthodes et nous avons conclu à la supériorité de la méthode de segmentation OTSU. Enfin, nous avons reconstruit des images 3D du crâne en utilisant la méthode Marching Cubes. Cette dernière est l'une des méthodes les plus utilisées en traitement numérique de l'image dans le domaine biomédical. | Format: Paperback | Language/Sprache: fr | 60 pp.
