Paperback. Condition: New. 254 pages. Like the capsizing of a boat, On the Hard in Paradise plunges readers into the deep end of the Virgin Islands, answering the question what would it be like to leave everything behind and move to a Caribbean island. Revealing the best and the worst, the coral reefs and the crime of this exotic destination, this is the true account of the authors remarkable year with her husband and son living on a catamaran in the West Indies. On the Hard in Paradise opens with a sampling of the authors country life on 92 acres in Californias Sierra Nevada where she rode a pair of aging quarter horses and her husband took excessive pride in the water pressure of their wells. In the winter she planted thready saplings hoping they would grow into Christmas trees, and one hot summer afternoon they watched as a legion of firefighters chased a 70-acre fire across their land. Fleenor tells about the decision to move to the Caribbean and a week of sailing classes on San Francisco Bay where her husband hoped shed learn, and maybe even love, to sail. Three chapters are devoted to the long flight across country in a twin-engine airplane. In their year in the islands they rode swells to pristine beaches and stumbled into squalid neighborhoods where prides of young men laid in wait for something to happen. The chapter titled Ten Seconds to Papa up and Gun records the exciting weekend of the Rolex Regatta. The authors yacht, Take Two, was the center of activity for nearly a hundred sailboats circling like Indians in war paint while awaiting the starting gun. Readers dive into the refreshing blue water at Coki Beach and into the sweaty crowd of flamingo-pink tourists at the annual chili...
