The air is filled with a mist that creeps along the ground, circles around corners and settles into the background. There is a soft music playing in the background. It is a tune, so soft and quietly playing that she cannot make out what it is. But the tempo, the beat matches the soft swaying of her heart. Violins play to the same tune that pulls across her heart, Paul, the music echoes his name and vibrates across time and space. Though she cannot make out what the name means because it is spoken in a language only the heart and spirit can understand. There is someone standing far off in the distance and she cannot see his face because it is covered in a hooded cloak. His face is not shown but there is something that she recognizes about this stranger who really isn't a stranger. She slips her small fingers into his warm hand and he firmly places a loving hand on the small of her back. They assume the classic stance of a waltz and begin to slowly move to the music. Is the music real or is it the attuned beating of their hearts that they hear Not knowing and not caring as long as the beat continues to play, they move slowly at first and continue to move. The beat picks up and their bodies begin to move faster and faster until the surroundings merge into a swirl of twisting flashes. Faster and faster they twirl until her head and body can no longer keep up. Their hands are held together but begin to lose their grip. She feels a force pulling her backwards and...
