Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****. Excerpt from Continental Union: A Short Study of Its Economic Side All three, it will be seen, adopt Mr. Bright's view that the colonies should and will take the course best adapted to promote their own welfare. These men were not traitors. Mr. Gladstone is premier of England to-day, Mr. Bright and Lord Sherbrooke were members of the Cabinet, Lord Balfour was permanent Under Secretary for the Colonies. Common sense tells us that a colony which, if we can conceive such foolishness, should run counter for any length of time to its own material interests for the sake of a sentimental attachment would lose population, be shunned by the investor, become a prey to discontent and probably at last cut loose in a rage from the parent State. The Liberals are not the only Englishmen who look with philosophical resignation to a change in the colonial relation. In his Memoirs of an ex-minister, Lord Malmesbury prints a letter from Lord Beaconsfield, then Mr. Disraeli, urging his Secretary of Foreign Affairs to push the Canadian fisheries question to a settlement whilst the situation at Washington is favorable, and remarking that these wretched colonies will all be independent in a few years, and are a millstone round our necks. Mr. Disraeli evidently agreed at bottom with Cobden, Bright, Sir George Cornwall Lewis, Sir Henry Taylor, and other leading men who were not able to see what advantage Britain derived from the possession of Canada, though keenly alive to the disadvantages of the connection to both.
