Excerpt: . . . test, using the consumers load, inserting the working standards in the low-tension side, but otherwise leaving the connections the same as in service (Figs. 299. 300 and 301). Light load tests may be made by loading the watt-hour meter from the low-tension side of the voltage transformer, if the capacity of the transformer will permit (Fig. 302). Where secondary tests are made at a low power-factor, using the consumers load, the watt-hour meter should be adjusted to the value of secondary accuracy corresponding to the actual power-factor. If the watt-hour meter has been previously relagged with respect to the high-tension side, this renders the meter correct at all powerfactors. For method of determining the correction curve for use with instrument transformers and watt-hour meters, see Chapter V. CASE I. -- Two-wire Watt-hour Meter With Only One Side Circuit Through The Watt-hour Meter. Fig. 261. --Watt-hour Meter Circuit Opened after Being Shunted.
