Not illustrated. 1898 Excerpt: .for the right of way, if this instrument is to be interpreted literally, is a grossly inadequate price for the easement or right of way across his place, if the depreciation to the land as to its market value is to be taken into consideration. I will also prove. that a number of times. between 1892. and 1895, different agents called on him and said to him that they would be back again and try to make a settlement; that they made no offer from the time of the laying of the pipe until the fall of 1895, and then he learned for the first time that they refused to pay him consequential damages. This offer was rejected. (Third assignment of error.) The Court, at request of defendant, gave binding instructions for defendant. (Fourth assignment of error.) Verdict for defendant, judgment thereon and plaintiff appealed, filing assignments of error, inter alia, as above indicated. W. S. Harris, for appellant. A contract cannot be enforced by one who has willfully, knowingly and fraudulently abused tht ignorance of the other party. Light r. Light, 21 Pa. 412. Meckley s Estate, 20 Id. 482. The foundation of a contract is the assent of the two minds meeting upon common ground If that assent is based upon false representations made by one party to the contract and believed and relied upon by the other, there is no real foundation for the assent and the law holds the contract void. Harding...
