Excerpt from The Third Report of the Secretary of the Class of 1862 of Harvard College: June, 1880 I address my apologies to those only who have aided me by a reply to my circular. Those who have taken no notice of this - and they are, as you will see, very few - should apologize to me and to the Class. I had wished, in view of the changes, so many and so deep, that have passed over our College, to give in this place a sketch, however brief, of the history of the College administration for the past five years, that those of our number who live at a distance from Cambridge, and those as well whose vocations keep their attention at a distance from the College, might, in some measure, understand how much it differs from what it was to us in under-graduate days. I am called away, and cannot do this as it should be done indeed, the task is one that requires great knowledge of the inner life of students, as well as the view, more or less superficial,...
