Let The Wild Winds Blow. Let the wild winds blow and soft fall the snow O er the grave where I sleep my last sleep. The slow years will pass as grows the green grass, Some loved one my vigil will keep. Forgotten I ll lie beneath the blue sky; My name will be mentioned no more. The rivers deep flow as onward they go Till they strike on eternity s shore. Though ages may go, still sleeping below I am lost to sight of all men. My friends and my name, my joys and my shame, Will never be talked of again. Let the soft wind blow, speak gentle and low, When I sleep in silence and death. Let the sad years pass, awake be the grass, As touched by a zephyr s warm breath. Forgotten my bed, asleep with the dead, My name will be mentioned no more. The sad years will go, I reap what I sow, And I ll travel this way nevermore. Oh, why should I fret now over the debt Which mercy has paid full and free! I mumble my prayer, I shed my last tear. May I wake at the last jubilee! He giveth me rest, for now I am blest, With the friends I still love so dear. The Great One will come when my sleeping is done, And wake me to the Land of Good Cheer.
