Outskirts Press, United States, 2010. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Why not live dangerously for a change? She knows she s smart, but she s bored. When Sophie meets Sam, a pre-Internet police detective who depends on her professional skills at the Dorado Bay Public Library, she decides to retire and go freelance. He s reluctant to hire her as a consulting researcher until she beats him to the murder scene and knows the victim. They awkwardly proceed to solve the crime with opposing techniques, uncovering a decades-old killing corporation and a religious cult, all in the same dysfunctional family. SOPHIE REDESIGNED is the first in a series of Sophie and Sam collaborations to solve crimes committed under Sophie s sharp nose for trouble. Elder issues drive the plots while family ties are tested, including Sophie s relationship with her son Robin, who thinks active retirement should not mean sneaking around the country for clues. Then there s the problem of growing warmth between two senior citizens who are past their romantic prime. Or are they? Karen Dahood is a septuagenarian whose nonfiction writing career has included all of the arts and humanities and some health care. Elder issues became a special interest as she witnessed older friends and family members struggle to keep their dignity in a culture of ageism and denial. Aging is rewarding, she says, but too often for the wrong people.
