The English people holds perhaps naturally the favour of Heaven. Providence rules the world, and the country is evidently destined to achieve, and has actually achieved, a great work in the order of the Providence that rules the world. What is the future in store for it? Accordingly, no doubt, as it corresponds with the designs of that Supreme Ruler. But at least in the matter of religion, the English people dares not only to expect but to claim the divine favor. England is in the main without religion, without knowledge of God or of Christ; it has been so any time these 350 years; in origin of the time of Shaftesbury, in the time of Queen Caroline, in our own time. But that is in small degree the fault of the English people. Heresy is the willful choice of error, and the English people are accordingly no heretics. Their religion was plundered and demolished by a banded conspiracy of Machiavels; the people did not reject, no section of them rejected, Christ or Christianity, as could unhappily not be said of other nationalities then or later; they took up arms for their religion, they were masters of the field - and they were cajoled by perjury and the last degree of human depravity. The ministrations of religion were excluded by penal laws, the penalties being hanging and quartering. The press was muzzled. Every vestige of Missal or Catechism was hunted up and destroyed; the printing and publishing of anything Catholic involved fine and imprisonment; the Catholic faith was stamped out by severe and organized repression. After two generations the bulk of the population, the people of England,...
