B. , 311 Range Block, Omaha, Neb. Since a medical journal is a class publication, its readers expect to find within its pages articles that deal with subjects in which they are directly interested. But how can a would-be contributor judge what would interest the readers of this journal, for instance Suppose that the majority of this journal s readers are surgeons and there appears an article on astigmatism, would this subject be of interest to them Hardly. Suppose that they are general practitioners, would an article on atomic theories be practical and timely to the latter Certainly not. What, then, would be of interest to the readers of this journal, supposing them to be general practitioners Obviously, something which may help them, at this season of the year, to conquer or crush the enemy known as disease. But we have been told by a medical authority that physicians do not know how to treat and are not at all able to cure patients suffering from pneumonia, for instance, and that they had better confess it to the public lest they (the dear people!) may call Christian Scientists, or Magnetic Healers, or Vitopaths, or any other of the many non-medical practitioners to fight this particular disease. Of what use, then, an article dealing with this subject, especially from one who is but an humble member of the medical profession--a little fellow That is, one who confesses that he does not...
