Excerpt: .upon a time there were two Kings, founded on Madame D Aulnoy s story, La Princesse Carpillon, produced December 26, 1853, was the last extravaganza of mine at that house, and terminated my long theatrical connection with the management of Madame Vestris. The following season witnessed her final retirement from the stage, and she died on the 8th of August, 1856, since which period no one has ever appeared possessing that peculiar combination of personal attractions and professional ability which, for so many years, made her the most popular actress and manager of her day. In December 1852--both my daughters having married and settled in the country--I left London and went to reside with my younger daughter and her husband, the Rev. H. S. Mackarness (brother of the present Bishop of Oxford), at Dymchurch, near Hythe; but in March 1854 I received an...
