TOWARDS the close of the winter, when the lengthened days and warmer radiance of the sun caused the sap to stir beneath the bark of the trees, like the returning pulse of life in a body restored from suspended animation, a band of Indians pitched their camp in a belt of sugar maples that grew alongside the banks of the Mattawa. They soon stripped great sheets of bark from the white-skinned birches, leaving the gaping wounds bleeding and raw, like some half-flayed creatures of the woods. Birchen vessels were soon sewn together by the deft fingers of the squaws. Deep incisions were made in the trunks of the maple3 with a hatchet, and the escaping sap was collected in the troughs. The kettles were swung,...
