This stream has only three or four feet water at its entrance; and, in the best weather, it can only be entered by small canoes. We arrived at Patook River the same evening; a strong current was setting out of it; the bar, on which there is generally eight or ten feet of water, shifts in the rainy season, or during heavy gales, and occasionally leaves a sufficient depth for vessels of considerable burden. The tides, which seldom or never rise exceeding a few feet, ebb and flow into it for some miles; it is of considerable magnitude, being augmented by several tributary streams, the chief of which is the Rio Barba of the Spaniards; it has an inferior mouth, beside that already mentioned, falling into lie Brewers Lagoon; it rises in a ridge of mountains, which separate it from the Great Cape River, and its course is estimated to be upwards of one hundred and fifty miles. Some dangerous shoals lay off the principal entrance; and from Patook Point, which is on the eastern side, a bank extends nearly two miles, on which there is very little water. The land in the interior is very fertile, and provisions are plentiful at this settlement, which is composed principally of negroes formerly belonging to Mr Hewlet, a merchant some time ago settled at...
