ROBERT CHARLES WINTHROP (1809-1894-) The oration of 1839 was delivered at the Broadway Tabernacle, by Mr. Winthrop of Boston. The speaker was a New Englander of the New Englanders, a descendant both of the Governor of his name in Massachusetts and of Governor Winthrop of Connecticut. Since 1834 Mr. Winthrop had been a member of the legislature of his state, and in this year had been elected to Congress. Later he was to serve as Speaker of the House, and, for a few months, as successor in the Senate to Mr. Webster. When invited to New York for this anniversary, however, he was only on the eve of his career as the able, conservative leader, but his gifts as an orator were known, and for occasional addresses he was in wide demand then as throughout the period of marked public life and the years of retirement that followed. ADDRESS TOWARDS the close of the year 1558, about 281 years ago, a little more than nine times the period which has been commonly assigned as the term of a generation, and only four times the three score years and ten which have been Divinely allotted to the life of man, a Virgin Princess ascended the throne of England. Inheriting, together with the throne itself, a full measure of that haughty and overbearing spirit which characterized the Royal race from which she sprang, she could not brook the idea of any partition of her power, or any...
