Excerpt: . four-gun battery was directed to proceed to Reed s Bridge, a substantial crossing about three miles up the stream, with orders to hold it as long as practicable, without bringing on an engagement, and in case of .attack to destroy it before retiring. Having thus made the proper disposition for holding two important bridges, the General rested, with Mitchell s Brigade, two regiments of Whittaker s, and a four-gun battery, at McAfee Church, ready to respond to a summons for assistance from either of his outposts. In the vicinity of Lee Gordon s Mill, by the Lafayette road about three miles to the south, General Rosecrans was still compelled to impatiently await the arrival of Maj.-Gen. Alex. McCook s command --the corps that had made its advance far to his right through Alpine Pass, and with the chronic misfortune of that officer had...
