Excerpt from The Philosophy of Thought: A Lecture Delivered at the Opening of the Free Church College, Halifax, Nova Scotia; Session 1852-3 To them, from the subtle analogies which the mind can perceive between even the most material and the most spiritual circumstances or objects. The power of perceiving analogies, Abstraction, Generalization, are the powers by which thought is so refined, and may be so large and general. The subtlest analogies are seen between mind and matter, and between matter and mind, between different objects and appearances in the material world, and between different states of the mental. An abstraction takes place, and whatever is non-essential in any observation of phenomena is at once discarded: a generalization takes place, and an observation becomes as wide as the universe. It is thus that the mind proceeds, whatever may be the objects with which it deals, whatever the subjects with which it is conversant. The progress from a rude and ignorant state to one of enlightenment and civilization is just the progress we have briefly indicated. There are first those imperfect generalizations by which objects are classified, their uses discerned, and their laws to some extent ascertained and determined. Nature becomes the minister of man, obeys his commands, and subserves his uses. Communities are formed nations dwell on the earth. The sciences are the offspring of physical wants, and afterwards become the instructors and companions of those whose wants gave them birth. The Creator has established the most beautiful laws in nature, among those objects which he has rendered subservient to his creature, Man. There is nothing but his law, and which does not serve its purpose,...
